HOW DOES EXCESS PROTECTION WORK?

When purchasing car insurance, it typically includes an excess, which is the initial amount you must pay before your insurer covers the remaining portion of your claim.

The excess consists of two components: compulsory and voluntary. The compulsory excess is determined by your insurer, while you decide the additional amount for voluntary excess.

With our Excess Protection cover, we will reimburse up to £350* of your excess. For example, if your total excess is £400, you pay this amount to your insurer, and we will refund up to £350* after your claim has been settled.

Drive with confidence knowing Toyota is here to help.

7. CAN EXCESS PROTECTION BE TRANSFERRED IF I SELL MY VEHICLE?

9. DOES RAISING YOUR EXCESS MAKE YOUR CAR INSURANCE CHEAPER?

Consider the financial benefits of adjusting your voluntary excess when reviewing your insurance policy. However, it's essential to carefully evaluate the advantages and disadvantages to determine if this adjustment aligns with your needs.

Increasing your voluntary excess can lead to a reduction in your insurance premium. This occurs because the insurer's potential payout decreases in the event of a claim.

10. WHEN DO YOU PAY EXCESS ON YOUR CAR INSURANCE?

Insurance companies operate in varying ways. You might be required to make an up-front payment at the beginning of the claims process, or the invoice could arrive when the claim is being processed for payment. With our Excess Protection cover, we will reimburse you up to £350* of this cost once the claim has been settled.

Nevertheless, it's crucial to assess your overall insurance excess and ensure it's at a manageable level in case you need to file a claim. Avoid raising your voluntary excess beyond what you can comfortably afford to contribute towards a claim.
